MMI Investments, L.P. Item 1: On April 2, 2009, MMI issued the following press release:

Chemed Corporation Purchases a Second Corporate Jet - MMI Investments Demands an End to Chemed Corporate Largesse

Thursday April 2, 2009, 12:45 pm EDT

The MMI Director Nominees Will Bring Much-Needed Independence and Stockholder Representation to the Chemed Board

NEW YORK, April 2 /PRNewswire/ -- MMI Investments, L.P. (“MMI”) today announced that it has sent a letter to the newly-elected Chairman of Chemed Corporation (“Chemed”), George J. Walsh III, demanding that Chairman Walsh promptly dismantle Chemed’s culture of corporate largesse, as embodied in Chemed’s November 2008 purchase of a corporate jet for nearly $9 million.

MMI President Clay B. Lifflander stated: “This November when many of America’s largest companies were being publicly excoriated for wasting stockholder capital on corporate jets, Chemed’s management and board decided to double its own fleet, acquiring a second 15-seat Hawker private jet. Yet even though this purchase accounted for more than 36% of 2008 capital expenditures for the whole company, there was no mention of it on the fourth quarter conference call and no disclosure in the company’s 2008 10K as to why 2008 corporate level capital expenditures were nearly 50 and 70 times 2007 and 2006 levels, respectively.”

“MMI nominated a highly qualified slate of independent director candidates for the Chemed Board because of entrenchment such as this. We fear that Chemed’s management and Board simply do not understand that they are merely stewards of stockholder capital -- not owners of it.”

The full text of MMI’s letter to Chairman Walsh follows:

April 2, 2009

Chairman George J. Walsh III
Chemed Corporation
2600 Chemed Center
255 East Fifth Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202-4726

Dear Chairman Walsh,

As a major long-term stockholder in Chemed Corporation (“Chemed”), MMI Investments, L.P. (“MMI”) believes that one of your first priorities as Chemed’s new Chairman should be the dismantling of Chemed’s culture of corporate largesse. The most egregious example (of which we are aware) is Chemed’s aircraft subsidiary, Jet Resources Inc., which expanded its fleet in November 2008, acquiring a 2001 Hawker 800XP for nearly $9 million.

We believe this expenditure is absurd in a company of Chemed's size and structure, representing 13.4% (not including the undisclosed carrying costs) of 2008 GAAP net income, over 36% of total 2008 capital expenditures and increases over Chemed's corporate level capital expenditures for 2006 and 2007 of nearly 7,000% and 5,000%, respectively. Even more troubling is that Chemed's board could justify the purchase of a $9 million Hawker 800XP when it already owns a Hawker 700, also a 15-seat aircraft. While Jet Resources Inc. does in fact offer charter services (an industry that ground to a halt well before November 2008 and that even in good times has no relevance to Chemed's two operating businesses, hospice care and plumbing/drain cleaning), it continues to do so solely with the Hawker 700 as we understand the new Hawker 800XP has not even been licensed for charter use. We note that the company's subsidiaries are all in North America, largely near major airports and managed in a decentralized fashion, and that the company's headquarters are in Cincinnati, home to a major airport and a Delta Airlines hub. An analysis of Chemed's new plane's activities since its purchase shows it reaching such highly-trafficked locations as Boston, Miami, New York, Chicago, Nashville, Atlanta, Philadelphia and Las Vegas. In fact it appears the most inconvenient location the new plane has been used to access is Bloomington, Indiana, near where we understand former Chairman Ed Hutton and current director Sandra Laney both keep personal residences.

In Chemed's March 16, 2009 letter rejecting MMI's demand in its February 12, 2009 letter for a tax-free spin-off of one of the company's two subsidiaries, CEO Kevin McNamara cited the "current market environment" as the primary reason Chemed would not proceed with a split-up and implied that Chemed would revisit the issue at the proper time. We can think of no reason stockholders could possibly trust the timing of a management and board who chose to upgrade its private jet fleet at stockholder expense in the midst of a 100-year storm in the global economy. MMI's decision to nominate its highly qualified slate of independent director candidates was due to our concerns about such decision-making.

We recognize that as a long-term board member you participated in the decision to purchase this aircraft, yet we nonetheless are hopeful that Chemed will begin the process of addressing its entrenched culture of corporate largesse in advance of the 2009 annual meeting.

Sincerely,

Clay Lifflander
